BALANCING THE SCALES OF JUSTICE WITH A LAWYER YOU CAN TRUST

Civil rights violations span numerous sectors; education, employment, housing, law enforcement, etc. Yet, for every right violated, there is a remedy.

If you or someone you care about has suffered a civil rights violation, I encourage you to contact me today. I will help you take action and seek justice. I offer a personal, direct, and free consultation to discuss your case and answer any questions you may have about the inherently complicated legal process.

As your legal counsel, I and my quality staff are committed to protecting and promoting your rights by providing high-quality, cost-effective representation. Together, we have the experience, knowledge, and resources to tackle the complexities of your case.

We have a wide range of experience in civil rights litigation, including cases involving discrimination based on race, national origin, color, age, gender, pregnancy, religion, disability, harassment and hostile work environments, retaliation, and wrongful discharge. We have also represented clients in cases involving police misconduct, excessive force, and false arrest.

As representatives of the voiceless, we take time to understand your goals. That means actively listening to your concerns and tailoring our services to address them.

You can count on us to be attentive and responsive to your needs from inception to completion of your legal case.

Beyond the fight for client justice, we aspire for permanent, constructive social change within the justice system. From the streets to Congress and the press, we are advocates for justice and equity as we proactively help write and pass important civil rights legislation that protects you.

We are dedicated to our community and frequently volunteer our time and resources through pro bono work and public education on the criminal legal system, social justice, federal and constitutional rights and statutes, employment law, etc.

Professional Biography

Mary Nwankwo is a passionate advocate for the promotion and protection of civil rights against governmental and institutional abuses of power. She received her Juris Doctor degree from Sturm College of Law, Denver CO where she was a student attorney, practicing under the school's civil rights clinic.

As a Nigerian-American, she has intimate familiarity with the Nigerian bar and judiciary. While unable to represent clients in the Nigerian court, she remains in partnership with lawyers qualified to practice law in Nigeria and extends her pro-bono work to conduct research and litigation in court for specific proceedings.

She has written published articles about constitutional law, employment and labor law, First and Fourth Amendment issues, international human rights and refugee protection in Africa, and global gender constitutionalism.

Mary is a member of numerous professional bodies including the Denver Bar Association, Colorado Bar Association, Colorado Association of Black Women Attorneys, Nigerian American Lawyers Association, Inc. (NALA), and the International Criminal Court.
